Tommy Quick is helping pave the way for stroke awareness and inclusion

When Bank Australia customer Tommy Quick suffered a severe childhood stroke, he decided not to let this event define him or stop him from pursuing an extraordinary life. Now the adventurer is riding over 1,000kms across Tasmania to raise stroke awareness, rally the community around inclusion, and raise funds for the Stroke Foundation.

Tommy will embark on a 1,100km ride through Tasmania, which will be quite different from his previous adventures.

While past trips focused on distance, the 'Takin' on Tassie' journey is about slowing down to focus on genuine community connection and engagement. The motto is simple: "fewer kilometres, more conversations, and a lot more hills!"

Over 30 days, Tommy will ride from the northwestern tip of Tasmania to the southeastern point to raise awareness about stroke in young people. "People often think strokes only affect older adults," Tommy says. "540 kids will suffer a stroke this year, and one third of those kids will be under the age of one."

How Sustain is building healthier equitable food systems

Food systems are endlessly complex, encompassing everything from food production through to policies, processing, community access and food waste management. Bank Australia customer and community customer grant recipient Sustain is addressing these intricacies at multiple leverage points, all while helping us make fruitful use of our old billboard ads (and diverting them from landfill). Last year, our marketing team was at a bit of a loose end about what to do with our old advertising billboard skins. After serving their purpose, the ad skins were destined for landfill. We reached out to various partner organisations to see if anyone had a use for the heavy duty vinyl banners. Sustain jumped at the chance, recognising that the skins would be useful to help carry out a process called solarisation on a new urban farm in Bundoora. This is a process of preparing soil for planting by killing off existing weeds and grass by covering them.

From 'drab hotbox' to sustainable dream

When Bank Australia customer Shaun first walked through the door of his Brunswick West apartment, he took in its drab interior and had one thought — "It's perfect!". Beyond the grey carpet and even greyer curtains, Shaun could see the potential of this one-bedroom flat.

"I think one of the main misconceptions with updating an apartment is that you can't do it yourself, and that it's really expensive," he says. "While it was probably the most challenging thing I've done, it's also the most rewarding, and things like laying the floor and installing the kitchen were actually way easier than I thought. It's worth having a crack!"

How you're helping save endangered cockatoos

Bank Australia customer Katanning Landcare has been working with their community to come up with and implement local solutions to global problems. Now, a Bank Australia community customer grant is supporting their important work to conserve the endangered Carnaby's cockatoo and ensure the survival of this gentle, gleeful bird.

Katanning has become an important refuge for the birds, with the town serving as a significant winter breeding and feeding area for the species.

Use your money as a force for good

"We don't often think of where your money is being held. It's purely a functional thing. But, knowing where I invest my money, where I hold my money, spend my money, knowing that it's actually doing something for good is definitely very comforting."
